The objective of Problem-Based Learning (PBL) is to engage students in active, self-directed learning by presenting them with real-world problems that they must solve. This approach encourages critical thinking, collaboration, and the application of knowledge to practical situations. Through PBL, students develop problem-solving skills, enhance their ability to work in teams, and improve their research and analytical skills. The ultimate goal is to promote deeper learning, where students not only acquire theoretical knowledge but also gain the skills to apply it effectively in real-life scenarios, fostering a more holistic and practical understanding of the subject matter.
